Fun Bites: Pop Land's Next Exciting Rides

Key Takeaways

- We attended Pop Land’s trial operation of its renovated area (v1.5), scheduled to open on April 30, just ahead of the May Golden Week holiday.
- The 5 new ride-based attractions and 17 carnival games significantly improved the park’s playability and consumer engagement.
- The new ticket price is Rmb148, vs. Rmb150 before renovation, despite the addition of new games and facilities. Each carnival game is priced at Rmb30.
- The park has introduced 11 external brands, including F&B names such as HEYTEA and Peet’s Coffee, and lifestyle brands such as Suki Suki Flower Shop.
- Pop Land accounts for <5% of Pop Mart’s China sales. Yet it has become an important driver of social media sharing, new product incubation, and fan engagement.

“We learned this from Disney. They have a very simple truth: continuous investment. When you keep making the right investments, the [IP] has a chance to keep going,” Pop Mart executive SI De recently said in a CNBC interview.

Investors are highly focused on the latest high-frequency data and channel checks, using them to extrapolate near-term trends over a longer horizon. While this approach has been highly effective over the past 9-12 months, it overlooks the long-term growth drivers that Pop Mart continues to build. Pop Land makes only a small contribution to Pop Mart’s P&L, but has become an important platform for content and product generation, fan retention, and new customer acquisition. The know-how required to operate and develop a theme park is replicable and could eventually enable Pop Mart to open more venues in China and overseas. Looking ahead, Beijing Pop Land v2.0, a larger space adjacent to the current premises, is scheduled to begin construction in 2027.

We are not dismissing the potential pressure on Pop Mart’s y/y sales growth this year given the high base, nor the possibility of a lack of near-term catalysts. Nonetheless, we think Pop Mart’s long-term business scope and TAM remain underappreciated, as we previously noted.

Valuation Methodology and Risks

Pop Mart International Group (9992.HK)

Base case value, target P/E of 23x for 2026e, aligned with its sales and earnings growth in 2025-27. This implies ~1.3x PEG on its 2025-27e EPS CAGR. We think re-rating could come as sales momentum continues in China and overseas markets, with good product line expansion and IP-centric new initiatives. We expect much higher earnings growth relative to large-cap global consumer plays.

Risks to Upside

- Faster overseas growth; opening of flagship stores
- Continual rollout of popular products and IP
- Success in new businesses
- Momentum in China retained

Risks to Downside

- Weak macro environment
- Uncertainties related to new products and IPs
- Inability to keep creating appealing products
- Unsuccessful overseas expansion
- Trade tensions
