

Alphabet

Expect AI innovation and integration at I/O

Reiterate Rating: BUY | PO: 430.00 USD | Price: 401.07 USD

Event could strengthen confidence in AI positioning

Alphabet will kick off its annual developer event (I/O) on May 19 with the keynote at 10am PST. While the event is developer-focused and unlikely to include financial updates, we expect a broad slate of AI announcements centered on next-gen Gemini LLM capabilities, Gemini powered O/S improvements, deeper Gemini integration across products, search utility improvements, and smart glasses capabilities (we note 8th gen TPUs recently announced at Google Cloud Next). Agentic AI will likely be a top theme, with Google expected to announce more autonomous capabilities across its products. Expectations are a bit elevated into this year's event, in our view, so N.T. risk is that lack of a "wow" announcement could pressure the stock. We think longer-term investors will appreciate Gemini improvements, benefits from AI integration across Google's product stack, and Google's strong position for agentic assistant leadership. Reiterate Buy.

Gemini 3.X or 4 LLM announcement seems likely

We expect early details on a next-gen Gemini LLM (4 or a major 3.X upgrade). Google could unveil stronger reasoning, coding, multimodal, and long-context capabilities alongside faster and cheaper Flash variants. The company is also expected to push deeper into video, image, and audio generation with upgraded models, while introducing more autonomous coding capabilities through Jules and other software engineering agents. We think Google could enhance its AI subscription offerings within premium Pro and Ultra tiers focused on higher limits, and broader agent capabilities, while extending AI bundling across the hardware ecosystem and Chrome.

Gemini evolution beyond chat to actions

Various reports suggest Google is preparing deeper agentic capabilities across Chrome, Gmail, Maps, Calendar, Search, and Android that allow Gemini to autonomously complete tasks like booking reservations, editing calendars, filling forms, managing shopping workflows, etc. Reports indicate Google may unveil expanded AI assistant capabilities with persistent memory, contextual understanding, live camera interaction, and proactive assistance capabilities. Chrome could get AI-powered browsing capabilities that would enable Gemini to interact with websites and execute multi-step tasks while keeping users in control of approvals and transactions.

Next phase of Search evolution

While I/O is not a consumer-focused event, Google could unveil additional AI-driven search features that enhance AI Mode functionality. New features could increasingly position AI Mode as free version of an AI assistant, and could include improved personalization, multi-app integration, and transactional capabilities. The Gemini app will also likely receive upgrades like persistent memory, proactive assistance, live multimodal interaction, and tighter integration with Android OS. We think Google is well positioned to convert its search users to AI users.

Android 17 and Gemini Intelligence will also be in focus

The event will also likely focus on Android's evolution from a mobile OS into a persistent AI-driven personal computing layer powered by "Gemini Intelligence". We expect Google to highlight and expand on already-announced Android 17 capabilities, which could include AI-powered task automation and broader multimodal experiences across devices. Some reports also suggest Google could preview a new operating system, Aluminum, combining ChromeOS and Android into one platform. Google will also likely showcase its newly launched AI-first laptop category, "Googlebook", tightly integrated with Gemini workflows. Additional announcements will likely include updates on Project Aura next-gen smart glasses (possible release in 2H'26), Wear OS upgrades, Gemini-powered automotive experiences, and potential previews of Pixel 11 hardware.

Google agentic updates could fuel AI disruption overhang

A major consumer agent launch from Google could fuel disruption concerns for transaction-based Internet platforms that rely on direct traffic, search discovery, and transaction-based take rates. While some companies will likely be featured as partners for Google's agent ecosystem, long-term concerns on direct traffic flows could be fueled if Google announces robust transaction capabilities. However, we think widespread agent adoption will likely take years, not quarters, and consumers will always value the capabilities (speed, cost savings, customer service) offered by best of breed eCommerce, travel and delivery apps. We would expect Booking and Expedia to be key partners in any agentic announcements around travel, while we would not expect Amazon to be an early partner for eCommerce.

AI momentum now a top driver for Google stock

We will look for the following as potential positives for Google stock: 1) Gemini LLM innovation that can drive both Google cloud adoption and consumer interest, 2) Material improvements in Google product capabilities from AI integration, 3) AI Mode and Gemini utility improvements that help maintain Google's position as a starting point for AI activity, 4) OS invention that provides Android ecosystems competitive advantages (though Apple is a Google AI partner), and 5) smart glass capabilities that build excitement into expected 2H release. With Google now valued at close to 27x 2027E EPS, "AI surprises" are likely needed to drive further multiple expansion.

Price objective basis & risk

Alphabet (GOOGL / GOOG)

Our price objective of $430/$430 is based on 28x 2027E core Google GAAP EPS plus cash per share. Alphabet has traded at an average multiple of 22x GAAP P/E over the last ten years, and we think our target multiple is reasonable vs history given expectations for double-digit revenue growth, Cloud margin expansion, and opportunity to capitalize on strong AI assets.

Downside risks are 1) loss of search traffic to AI tools from competitors, 2) LLM integration in search may take longer than expected or negatively impact search revenues, 3) revenue pressure from compliance with the EU Digital Markets Act (DMA), and 4) potential for increasing Capex and lower FCF-given AI investments.
